DE-DŪ-CI-BLE, a. [It. deducibile; Sp. deducible.] That may be deduced or inferred; inferrible; consequential. "Deducible from these." South.

DE-DŪ-CI-BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being deducible; deducibility. Scott.

DE-DŪ-CIVE, a. Performing a deduction; inferential. [R.] Bailey.

DE-DŪCT, v. a. [L. deduco, deductus.—See DEDUCE.] [i. DEDUCTED; pp. DEDUCTING, DEDUCTED.]

1. To subtract; to take away; to separate.

We deduct from the computation of our years that part of our time which is spent in the incogitancy of infancy. Norris.

2. † To reduce; to bring down. "Do not deduct it to days." Massinger.

Syn.—Deduct and subtract have both the meaning of taking from, but the former is used in a general, and the latter in a technical sense. The tradesman deducts what has been paid from the entire debt, and thus learns what remains due; the accountant subtracts small sums from the gross amount.

DE-DŪCT'ION, n. [L. deductio; It. deduzione; Sp. deducción; Fr. deduction.—See INDUCTION.]

1. The act of deducing or subtracting.

2. That which is deducted or taken away; an abatement. "Make fair deductions." Pope.

3. The act of drawing inferences.

To draw out a particular truth from a general truth in which it is enclosed is deduction; from a necessary and universal truth to draw consequences which necessarily follow, is demonstration. Fleming.

4. That which is drawn from premises; an inference; a conclusion.

So he deduces from the word of God, with such deductions, that he is not a man, but a deity. Dugdale.

DE-DŪCT'IVE, a. [It. deductivo.] Relating to, or coming by, deduction; deducible.

Mathematics will ever remain the most perfect type of the deductive method. J. S. Mill.

DEED, n. [Goth. ded; A. S. dæd; Dut. daad; Ger. that; Sw. daä; Dan. daad.—See DO.]

1. That which is done; an action; an act; a performance. "Charitable deeds." Smalridge.

2. An exploit; an achievement; a feat.

Thousands were in darker fate than dwell, Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

3. Power of action; agency. "With will and deed created free." Milton.

4. Reality; fact;—used in adverbial phrases with in; as, "In very deed"; "In deed and in truth."

In and deed are written as one word, and form an adverb, when not modified or coupled with some other phrase; as, "Indeed it is."

5. (Law.) An instrument in writing upon paper or parchment, between parties able to contract, and duly sealed and delivered. Kent.

The term is usually confined in its application to conveyances of real estate, or of some interest therein.—Whether it is essential that a deed be signed as well as sealed, seems to be still a question in English law.—In American law it appears to be the prevailing doctrine that a deed must be signed as well as sealed. Burrill.

Syn.—Deed and act are both applied to what is done; but act refers to the power exerted, and deed to the work performed; as, "A voluntary or involuntary act"; "A good or a bad deed." Act is a single effort or exertion of power; as, "The act of the will or of the government." Action is a continued exercise of power, and is opposed to a state of rest; as, "The action of a machine." Feat is commonly applied to such performances as require strength and activity of the body. "The feats of horsemanship or of jugglery." Deed, exploit, and achievement are terms which rise progressively on each other. Exploit and achievement, without an epithet, are used in a good sense; and an achievement is more than exploit. Deeds are good or bad, ordinary or extraordinary; exploits and achievements, extraordinary performances.—See ACT.

DEED, v. a. To transfer or convey by deed.

Used in the U. S.;—chiefly as a colloquial word. Puckering.

DEED'LESS, a. Without action; inactive; indolent. "Deedless boasters." Pope.

DEED'-POLL, n. (Law.) A single deed; a deed made by one party only, not indented, but cut even on the edges, or *poll*ed, as it was anciently termed.

A deed-poll is not, strictly speaking, an agreement between two persons, but a declaration of some one particular person respecting an agreement made by him with some other person. Butcher.

The peculiar and almost magical effect of the diorama arises, in a considerable measure, from the contrivance employed in exhibiting the painting, which is viewed through a large aperture or proscenium. Beyond this opening the picture is placed at such a distance that the light is thrown upon it, at a proper angle, from the roof, which is glazed with ground glass, and cannot be seen by the spectator, who is in comparative darkness, receiving no other light than what is reflected from the painting itself. By means of shutters or curtains the light may be diminished or increased at pleasure, and some parts of the picture being transparent, light may be admitted through it, — an artifice which secures the advantages of painting in transparency without its defects. P. Cyc.

DĪ-Ō-RĀM'IC, a. Relating to, or resembling, a diorama. Month. Rev.

DİS- (dis or diz). An inseparable particle, which sometimes implies separation, but commonly privation or negation, equivalent to the particle un; as, to arm, to disarm.

"When the accent, either primary or secondary, is on this inseparable preposition, the s is always sharp and hissing; but when the accent is on the second syllable, the s will be either hissing or buzzing, according to the nature of the consecutive letter. That is, if a sharp mute, as p, t, k, or c hard, succeed, the preceding s must be pronounced sharp and hissing, as dispose, distaste, &c.; but if a flat mute, as b, d, or g hard, or a vowel or a liquid, begin the next syllable, the foregoing s must be sounded like z, as disburse, disdain, &c.; but if the secondary accent be on this inseparable preposition, as in disbelief, &c., the s retains its pure hissing sound." Walker.

In accordance with Walker, Smart says, "As to the pronunciation of this prefix, the s is unvoiced [i. e. sharp or hissing] if the accent, primary or secondary, is on the syllable; but if the next syllable be accented, and begin with a real vowel (not u) or a vocal consonant [i. e. flat mute], the s is sounded z, unless the word is connected with a principal word in which the s is unvoiced, for in such case the derivative follows the primitive."

DJS-CRÉTE', v. a. [L. discerno, discretus] To separate; to divide. Brown.

DJS-CRÉTE' [dis'krät, W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. Wb.; dis'krät, S. Ash], a. [L. discerno, discretus, to separate].
1. Separate; distinct; not continuous. Johnson.
2. Disjunctive; disjunctive.

"I resign my life, but not my honor," is a discrete proposition. Johnson.

Discrete proportion, (Arith.) is one in which the ratio of the first term to the second is equal to that of the third to the fourth, but not equal to that of the second to the third; thus, 3:6::8:16;—opposed to a continued or geometrical proportion, of which the following is an example; 3:6::12:24. Da. & P.—Discrete quantity, a quantity of which the component parts have a separate and distinct existence; thus, numbers are discrete quantities, being composed of separate units. Brande.

Syn.—"This word and its companion concrete, one would have supposed, should have the same accentuation in all our pronouncing dictionaries; and yet scarcely any two words are more differently accented. The accent is placed on the last syllable of concrete by Dr. Ash, Buchanan, Perry, Entick, and Bailey; and on the first by Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Smith, W. Johnston, and Dr. Kenrick. Scott accents the last syllable of concrete when an adjective, and the first when a substantive—a distinction very agreeable to analogy; but Entick, directly contrary to this analogy, reverses this order. Discrete is always used as an adjective, but has scarcely less diversity of accentuation than concrete. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Perry, and Entick accent it on the last syllable; and Dr. Ash, Mr. Sheridan, and Bailey on the first.—But I apprehend the accent ought to be placed on the first syllable of concrete when a substantive, and on the last of both words when adjectives." Walker.

It may be seen that all the recent authorities place the accent on the second syllable of discrete, but a majority of them on the first syllable of concrete.—See CONCRETE.

3. [A. S. dugan; Ger. taugen.] To succeed; to fulfil or answer a purpose.

"In the phrase this will do, [meaning] this will answer the purpose, the word do is wholly different from the word meaning to act. The inflection of the two words is different in Anglo-Saxon; the infinitives are dugan and don, respectively." Latham.

4. To be in a certain state, as regards health.

That ye may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus shall make known all things. Eph. vi. 21.

How does your honor for this many a day? Shak.

To have done with, to cease to be concerned with; — used only in the compound past tenses.

I have done with Chaucer when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

To do without, to dispense with.

Do sometimes serves to transpose affirmative into negative or interrogative sentences; as, "He hears: he does not hear"; "He speaks: does he speak?"

Do is frequently used to save the repetition of a verb, or phrase containing a verb; as, "If you can grant his request, do so."

Lucretius wrote on the nature of things in Latin, as Empedocles had already done in Greek. Acton.

The word which is represented by do can often be supplied after it; as, "Help me, do:" i. e. do help me"; "He envies me as much as I do him;" i. e. as much as I do envy him."

Do is also used as an auxiliary verb for the sake of emphasis: —

1. By way of positive assertion.

Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee: and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shak.

2. By way of strong negation; as, "I cannot, I do not believe it."

3 To convey the idea that what was once true is not true now.

My lord, you once did love me. Shak.

Do is sometimes used as an auxiliary without adding any thing to the meaning of the verb with which it is connected.

'Tis true this god did shake,
His coward lips did from their color fly,
And that same eye whose bend doth awe the world
Did lose his lustre. Shak.

Do is sometimes superfluous or expletive. This use of the word is obsolescent.

I am not gamester: I do lack some part Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Shak.

1. A poem or prose composition in which the action or narrative is not related, but represented. The various species of the drama are tragedy, comedy, tragi-comedy, farce, opera, and burletta.

The circumscription of time wherein the whole drama begins and ends is, according to ancient rule and best example, within the space of twenty-four hours. Milton.

2. Dramatic literature.

3. "The last mode [drām'a] of pronouncing this word is that which was universally current till within these few years; but the first [drā'ma] has insensibly stolen into use, as we may observe from the several dictionaries which have adopted it. Mr. Sheridan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Nares, as far as we can judge by the position of the accent, pronounce it with the first a long; and Dr. Kenrick and Buchanan with the same letter short. Mr. Scott gives both ways; but, by placing the sound with the long a first, seems to prefer it. The authorities are certainly on the side I have adopted; and I think it may be with confidence asserted that an Englishman, who had never heard the word drama pronounced, would naturally place the accent upon the first syllable, and pronounce the vowel in that syllable long and slender." Walker.

Syn. — See PLAY.

DRA-MÁT'IC, } a. [Gr. δραματικός; L. dramaticus; It. drammatico; Sp. dramático; Fr. dramatique.] Relating to, or having the form of, a drama; represented by action; theatrical.

E.

E, the fifth letter of the alphabet, is the second L, and the most frequent vowel in the English language. It has various sounds, the two principal of which are long, as in metre, and short, as in met. It is frequently silent at the end of words, but sometimes, in this case, serves to indicate that the preceding vowel is to have its long sound; as cân, câne; mân, mâne; plûm, plûme. When silent after c and g, it has also the effect of showing that these letters should have respectively the sounds of s and j; as, kîce, stâge, which, without the final silent e, would become lûc and stâg.

E- A Latin prefix, the same as ex, signifying from, or out of, and in many words having a privative meaning.

EACH (sch), a. & pron. [Celt. ceach; A. S. ele, or ele; Dut. elk.] Either of two; one of two or any greater number taken separately from another, and implying the existence of the other; every one separately considered.

Though your orbs of different greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use disposed. Dryden.
The invention all admired, and each how he
To be the inventor missed. Milton.

EACH can be applied to one of two or any greater number; every can be applied only to one of more than two individuals. — See ALL.

6. (Chem.) A body or substance composed of oxygen and a base; a metallic oxide, inodorous, dry, uninfammable, and infusible. P. Cyc.
The principal chemical earths are alumina, baryta, glucina, lime, magnesia, silica, strontia, yttria, and zirconia. P. Cyc.

Syn.—Earth is used as the name of one of the planets belonging to the solar system, which move round the sun. In this sense, world or globe is inadmissible. In speaking of the earth, reference is commonly made to its material or external part; as, "The structure or surface of the earth;" "The productions or inhabitants of the earth;" World is used to denote the earth viewed with reference to its inhabitants. "A decree that all the world should be taxed." "The civilized world." "The eastern world." "The western world." Globe is often used geographically and geologically; as, "The terrestrial globe." We speak of sailing round the world, or round the globe; not, round the earth.

EARTH, v. a. [i. EARTHED; pp. EARTHING, EARTHED.]

1. To put or to hide in earth; to bury; to inter. "The miser earths his treasure." Young.

Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain
Through labor and endurance. Milton.

2. Freedom from solicitude or from annoyance; quiet; tranquillity.

Among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest. Deut. xxviii. 45.

If thou desirest ease, in the first take care of the ease of thy mind, for that will make other sufferings easy. Fuller.

3. Intermission of labor; rest; repose.

After no more toil,
Of their sweet gardening labor, than sufficed
To recommend cool zephyr, and made ease
More easy. Milton.

The love of ease is always gaining upon age.

4. Facility; exemption from difficulty.

And winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way. Milton.

5. Freedom from stiffness, constraint, or formality in manners, speech, or writing.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learned to dance. Pope.
At ease, free from pain or from anxiety; undisturbed; tranquil.

Syn.—Ease, repose, quiet, and rest, all imply a motionless state. Ease and quiet respect action on the body; rest and repose, action of the body. We are easy or quiet when freed from all external agency that is painful; we have rest or repose when the body ceases to be in motion.—A person enjoys ease, or has easiness of disposition.—Easiness of an undertaking; facility of performance. A person is said to live at ease, and to perform his task with facility.

echo; It. eco, ecco; Sp. eco; Fr. écho.]

1. A sound reflected from a distant surface, and repeated to the ear; the repercussion of sound; the sound returned.

Babbling Echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horns. Shak.

2. (Myth.) A nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen
Within thy airy shell. Milton.

3. (Arch.) A vault or arch made for the purpose of producing echoes. Brande.

ĒCH'Ō (ēk'ō), v. n. [i. ECHOED; pp. ECHOING, ECLAIRCISSEMENT (ē-klār'siz-māng' or ē-klār'- siz-mēnt) [ē-klār'siz-mēnt, IV. Ja.; ē-klār'sizmēnt, S.; ē-klār'siz-mōn, P.; ē-klār'siz-mōng, J. Sm.; ē-klār'siz-mōng' or ē-klār'siz-mēnt, A.;

ē-klār'siz-māng, F.], n. [Fr.] Explanation;
the act of clearing up an affair.

I will follow your example in the frankness and openness of this éclaircissement. Warburton.

"This word, though long in use, is not yet naturalized. Every syllable but the last may be perfectly pronounced by an Englishman who does not speak French; but this syllable, having a nasal vowel, not followed by hard c or g (see ENCORE), is an insuperable difficulty; the nearest sound to it would perhaps be to make it rhyme with long and strong.
But a speaker would, perhaps, risk less by pronouncing it like an English word at once, than to imitate the French sound awkwardly." Walker.

Ē-CLĀR'CĪZE, v. a. [Fr. éclaircir; clair, clear.]
To clear from obscurity; to make clear; to explain. Craig. N. Y. Independent.

ĒC-LĀMP'SY, n. [Gr. ἐκλαμψις; ἐκλάμω, to shine.]
(Med.) A flashing of light, such as is symptomatic of epilepsy. Smart.

ē-klāw', S. W. E. F. K.], n. [Fr.]

1. Striking effect; brilliancy; splendor; lustre; as, "The éclat of a great achievement."

2. Noise; acclamation; renown; applause;
as, "The speech was received with great éclat."

ĒC-LĒC'TIC, a. [Gr. ἐκλεκτικός; ἐκλέγω, to choose;
It. eclettico; Sp. eclectico; Fr. électique.] Selecting; choosing;—applied particularly to certain ancient philosophers who professed to choose what was good from all sects. "Cicero was of the eclectic sect." Watts.

ĒC-LĒC'TIC, n. 1. One of a class of ancient philosophers, who professed to be of no one sect, but to choose what was good from all sects;—one who selects his opinions from those of others, or from different sources. Brande.

2. One of a sect in the Christian church, who considered the doctrine of Plato conformable to the spirit of the Christian doctrine. Buck.

3. One of a sect of physicians among the ancients. Todd.

fail; L. eclypsis; It. eclissi;
Sp. eclipse; Fr. éclipse.]

Fig. 1.

1. (Astron.) An obstruction or obscuration of the light of a heavenly body by the intervention of another body; thus, S representing the sun, M the moon, and E the earth, Fig. 1, in which the moon is interposed between the sun and the earth, shows an eclipse of the sun; and Fig. 2, in which the earth is interposed between the sun and the moon, shows an eclipse of the moon. Brande.

Fig. 2.

2. Obscuration; darkness.
Light, the prime work of God, to me is extinct, Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse. Milton.

Ē-CLĪPSE' (ē-klips'), v. a. [i. ECLIPSED; pp.
ECLIPSING, ECLIPSED.]

1. To darken or obscure by intercepting the light from a luminous body; as, "The sun is eclipsed by the moon."

2. To render less striking or dazzling; to obscure; to cloud; to veil.

He eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Calamy.

Another now hath to himself engrossed
All power, and us eclipsed. Milton.

4. To put out; to extinguish. "Born to eclipse thy life." [R.] Shak.

Ē-CLĪPSE' (ē-klips'), v. n. To suffer an eclipse.

The laboring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.

Ē-CLĪP'TIC, a. [Gr. ἐκλειπτικός; relating to an eclipse; ἐκλείπω, to cease, to fail; L. eclypticus;
Fr. écliptique.]

1. Relating to, or described by, the ecliptic.

"Ecliptic way." Blackmore.

2. In eclipse; obscured; clouded; darkened.

"Ecliptic condition." Sir T. Herbert.

Ecliptic digit, the 12th part of the diameter of the sun or moon; a term used to define the magnitude of an eclipse. Brande.

Ē-CLĪP'TIC, n. (Astron.) An imaginary great circle of the sphere, or of the heavens, representing the path which the earth describes among the fixed stars in its annual revolution about the sun, and intersecting the equinoctial at an angle of about 23° 28'; the apparent path of the sun about the earth;—so called because eclipses happen only when the moon is in the same plane or very near it. Brande.

ĒC'LŌGUE (ēk'lōg), n. [Gr. ἐκλογή, choice; L.
ecloga.] A pastoral poem; a bucolic. Pope.

The persons, who are introduced conversing in eclogues, or whose adventures are recounted in them, are shepherds.
Brande.

nōm'ē-kāl, W. J. F. Ja. Sm.; ē-kō-nōm'ē-kāl, S. E.
R.], a. [Gr. οικονομικός; L. economicus; It. & Sp.
economico; Fr. économique.—See ECONOMY.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of a household. "Economical affairs." Watts.

2. Careful in expenditures; not wasteful or extravagant; frugal; thrifty; sparing; saving;
as, "An economical servant or housekeeper."

3. Managed with frugality; as, "An econom- ical establishment."

Syn.—See FRUGAL.

ĒC-Q-NŌM'IC-CAL-LY, ad. In an economical or frugal manner; with economy.

ĒC-Q-NŌM'ICS, n. pl. Household management.
"In politics and economics." Knob.

Ē-CŌN'Q-MĪST, n. 1. A frugal manager of domestic or public affairs. Goldsmith.

2. One versed in political economy. Smart.

Ē-CŌN'Q-MĪ-ZĀ'TION, n. The act of economizing or managing frugally. Ed. Rev.

Ē-CŌN'Q-MĪZE, v. a. [i. ECONOMIZED; pp. ECON-OMIZING, ECONOMIZED.] To manage frugally; to employ with economy; to save. "To econ- omize time or money." Todd.

Ē-CŌN'Q-MĪZE, v. n. To be prudent or frugal in expenditures; to be economical. "He does not know how to economize." Smart.

Ē-CŌN'Q-MY, n. [Gr. οικονομία; οἶκος, a house, and νομός, a rule or law; L. oconomia; It. & Sp.
economia; Fr. économie.]

1. The management of a family.

By St. Paul's economy, the heir differs nothing from a servant. Ep. Taylor.

2. Thrifty management; frugality in the use of money, time, and labor.

I have no other notion of economy than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

3. Disposition, regulation, or arrangement of things, whether in the works of nature or of man; as, "Animal economy;" "Vegetable economy;" "The Jewish economy."

This economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epic poem.

Political economy, the science which investigates the circumstances most favorable to the production of national wealth, and the laws which determine its distribution among the different ranks and orders of society. Brande.

Syn.—Economy is more comprehensive than fru- gality. It includes frugality, and implies a prudent management of affairs. Frugality is care in avoiding needless expense. Economy and frugality are virtues; parsimony, which is an excessive and penurious frugality, is a vice. The term economy is variously applied, as the economy of a family, of a government, of nature, or of the universe; the management of business. A judicious economy, proper frugality; mean parsimony.

Ē-LĀB'Q-RĀTION, n. [L. elaboratio; Sp. elaboración; Fr. élaboration.]

1. The act of elaborating; great labor.
2. (Phys.) Process of assimilation in animals or vegetables; as, "The elaboration of the tissues"; "Elaboration of sap"; "The elaboration of the sperm and eggs." Ray.

Ē-LĀB'Q-RĀT-QR, n. One who elaborates. Ogilvie.

†Ē-LĀB'Q-RĀ-TQ-RY, n. [Fr. laboratoire.] A laboratory. — See LABORATORY. Wood.

Ē-LĀE'IS, n. [Gr. ἔλαια, the olive-tree.] (Bot.) A genus of palms which afford oil. P. Cyc.

Ē-LĀE'Q-CĀR'PUS, n. [Gr. ἔλαια, the olive-tree, and καρπός, fruit.] (Bot.) A genus of evergreen trees, the stones in the fruit of which, being cleaned from the pulp and set in gold, are formed into necklaces. Loudon.

Ē-LĀE'Q-LĪTE, n. [Gr. ἔλαιον, oil, and λίθος, a stone.] (Min.) A coarse, massive variety of nepheline. Dana.

Ē-LĀ'E-DĀTE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of elaidic acid with a base. Ogilvie.

ĒL-Ā-ID'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid derived from elaidine and potassa. Francis.

Ē-LĀ'I-DĪNE, n. [Gr. ἔλαιον, oil.] (Chem.) A fatty matter produced by the action of nitric acid upon certain oils, particularly castor-oil. P. Cyc.

Ē-LĀIN', or Ē-LĀ'IN, n. [Gr. ἔλαιον, oil.] (Chem.) That portion of fat or oil which retains the liquid state; oleine. — See OLEINE. Brande.

Ē-LAI-ŌD'IC, a. [Gr. ἔλαιον, oil, and ὄξος, form.] (Chem.) Derived from castor-oil. Brande.

Ē-LAI-ŌM'Ē-TĒR, n. [Gr. ἔλαιον, oil, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for detecting the adulteration of olive-oil. Brande.

Ē-LĀ'IS, n. (Bot.) See ELÆIS. Loudon.

†Ē-LĀMP'ING, a. Illuminating like a lamp; shining. G. Fletcher.

Ē-LANCE', v. a. [Fr. lancer.] To throw out; to shoot out; to dart.

Blanca thy thought, and think of more than man. Young.

Ē-LAND, n. (Zool.) A species of antelope, found in Africa, being the largest of the antelopes; Antelope orcas. Fischer.

Ē-LĀ'NUS, n. [Fr. élan, sudden motion.] (Ornith.) A genus of birds of the kite kind; the swallow-tailed hawk. Nuttall.

Ē-LĀ'Q-LĪTE, n. [Gr. ἔλαια, an olive, and λίθος, a stone.] (Min.) A brittle mineral of a greasy lustre, found in Norway, and sometimes used in jewellery. Brande.

ĒL-Ā-ŌP'TEN, n. (Chem.) The liquid portion of the volatile oils, when separated from the concrete or crystallizable portion, which had been called stearopten. — See STEAROPTEN. Brande.

Ē-LĀP-I-DĀTION, n. [L. e, priv., and lapidatio, a throwing of stones; lapis, a stone.] A clearing away of stones. Ogilvie.

Ē-LĀPH'Ī, n. pl. [Gr. ἑλαφος, a stag.] (Zool.) A family of ruminants including the musk-deer, the stag, and the giraffe. Van Der Hoeven.

ĒL'Ā-PHĪNE, a. (Zool.) Resembling the stag, or Cervus elaphus. Craig.

Ē-LĀPSE', v. n. [L. elapso, elapsus.] [i. ELAPSED; pp. ELAPSING, ELAPSED.] To pass away; to glide away; to lapse; — applied to time; as, "A long time has elapsed since I saw him."

Ē-LĀQ'UE-ATE (ē-lāk'we-āt), v. a. [L. e, priv., and laqueo, to entangle; laqueus, a snare.] To disentangle. Clarke.

Ē-LĀS'MQ-DŪS, n. [Gr. ἑλασμός, a metal plate, and δούς, a tooth.] (Pal.) A genus of fossil placoid fishes of the family Chimæridæ. Pictet.

Ē-LĀS-MQ-THĒ'RI-ŪM, n. [Gr. ἑλασμός, a metal plate, and θήριον, a beast.] (Geol.) A large, extinct, pachydermatous animal. Brande.

Ē-LĀS'TIC, } a. [Gr. ἑλαστος, to drive; It. elastico; Fr. élastique.]

Ē-LĀS'TI-CAL, } It. & Sp. elastico; Fr. élastique. Having elasticity; having power to restore or to return to the original form; springing back; springy; rebounding. "Like a piece of elastic gum." Paley. "A subtle, elastic ether." Burke.

Ē-LĀS'TI-CAL-LY, ad. In an elastic manner; with a spring. Clarke.

Ē-LĀS'TIC-GŪM, n. Caoutchouc or India-rubber. Crabb.

Ē-LAS-TIC'ITY, n. [It. elasticità; Sp. elasticidad; Fr. élasticité.] A property in certain bodies by which they restore themselves to their original form and dimensions after the external force, by which they have been dilated or compressed or bent, is withdrawn; springiness; tendency to rebound. Brande.

Ē-LĀS'TIC-NESS, n. The quality of being elastic; elasticity. Scott.

Ē-LĀTE', a. [L. elatus.] Raised, elevated, or elated in spirits; flushed, as with success. Pope.

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.

Ē-LĀTE', v. a. [L. elaffo, elatus.] [i. ELATED; pp. ELATING, ELATED.]

1. To elevate, as with success; to puff up; to flush; to inflate. "Elated by victory." Hume.
2. To heighten; to exalt. [R.]

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

Ē-LĀT'ED-LY, ad. In an elated manner. Feltham.

Ē-LĀT'ED-NESS, n. The state of being elated.

Ē-LĀT'ĒR, n. [Gr. ἑλᾶτερ, Sm. C. Henslow; ἑλᾶτερ, Cl. Brande.] [Gr. ἑλᾶττω, a leaper.]

1. (Ent.) One of the Elatæridæ. Harris.
2. (Bot.) An elastic, spiral filament. Henslow.

Ē-LĀT'ĒR, n. That which elevates. Boyle.

ĒL-g-TĒR'Ī-DE, n. pl. (Ent.) A family of coleopterous insects that throw themselves upwards with a jerk when laid on their backs; spring-beetles. Harris.

Ē-LĀT'Ē-RINE, n. (Chem.) The active principle of the elaterium or wild cucumber. Hoblyn.

Ē-LĀT'Ē-RITE, n. Mineral caoutchouc, an elastic variety of bitumen. Buchanan.

ĒL-g-TĒ'RI-ŪM, n. [L., from Gr. ἑλᾶττω.]

1. (Med.) A powerful cathartic obtained from the wild cucumber (Cucumis sylvestris). Hill.
2. (Bot.) A kind of fruit, such as is found in the genus Euphorbia, consisting of three or more carpels, consolidated when young, but bursting with elasticity when ripe. Brande.

ĒL'Ā-TĒR-Y, n. [Gr. ἑλᾶσπις, driving, forcing.] Force which drives apart; elasticity. [R.] Clarke.

ĒL'Ā-TINE, n. (Bot.) A genus of water-plants; water-wort; water-pepper. Craig.

Ē-LĀ'TION, n. [L. elatio; It. elazione.] The state of being elated; high spirits from success; exaltation; pride of prosperity; elevation.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind by withdrawing his favors. Atterbury.

ĒL'BŌW (ē'bw), n. [A. S. elboga; Ger. elbogen; Dut. elleboog; Dan. albue.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

2. Any flexure or angle; a sudden or abrupt turn; as, "An elbow in a wall, or in a river."

3. (Arch.) An upright side which flanks a panel-work; as, "The elbows of a window." Francis.

EL DO-RÄ'DÖ, n. [Sp., the golden region.] A proverbial term for an imaginary country abounding in gold or other rich products of nature;—so applied from the fact that Orellana, the lieutenant of Pizarro, pretended to have discovered a region in South America, which he thus named from the immense quantity of gold and other precious metals that he asserted he had seen in Manoa, its capital. P. Cyc.

ELD'R[CH], a. Hideous; ghastly. [Local.] Clarke.

EL-E-ÄT'IC, a. [Gr. ἐλεγκτικός.] Noting a system of ancient philosophy, which derived its name from Elea, in Italy, the residence of Xenophanes, the founder. P. Cyc.

EL-E-ÄT'IC, n. An adherent to the Eleatic philosophy. Brande.

EL-E-CAM-PÄNE', n. [From the official name Emula campana.] Loudon.

1. (Bot.) A species of large, herbaceous plants, growing in moist meadows, the bitter root of which is sometimes used to flavor confectionery; Emula helenium. Loudon.

2. A sweetmeat, or common candy, made of the root of the plant elecampane. Hill.

EL-E-CT', v. a. [L. eligo, electus; It. eleggere; Sp. elegir; Fr. élire.] [i. ELECTED; pp. ELECTING, ELECTED.]

1. To take in preference; to select as preferable; to choose.

O ye gods! might
I elect my fate! Philips.

2. To choose for any office or use; to select by vote; as, "To elect a representative."

3. (Theol.) To select for some peculiar privilege or favor; to predestinate. Burnet.

Syn.—See CHOOSE.

EL-E-CT', a. [It. eletto; Sp. electo.]

1. Selected as preferable; taken by preference from among others; chosen.

With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks. Milton.

2. Chosen to an office, but not yet in office. The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy. Ayliffe.

EL-E-CT', n. (Theol.) 1. One chosen or set apart. Behold mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth. Isa. xlii. 1.

2. A person or persons elected for some peculiar privilege, or for salvation.

Shall not God avenge his own elect?
Luke xviii. 7.

EL-E-CT'ANT, n. An elector. [R.] Search.

EL-E-CT'Ä-RY, n. [L. electarius.] A form of medicine.—See ELECTUARY. Walker.

EL-E-CT'I-CISM, n. Eclecticism. Craig.

EL-E-CT'ION, n. [L. electio; It. elezione; Sp. eleccion; Fr. élection.]

1. The act of electing or choosing.

2. Power of choosing; free choice; preference; selection.

He has referred it to our own election which we will choose. Rogers.

3. The act or the public ceremony of choosing officers of government.

I was sorry to hear with what popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

4. Distinction; discrimination.

To use men with much difference and election is good; for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. (Theol.) The choice made by God of individuals of the human race to enjoy peculiar privileges and blessings; predestination. Rom. ix. 11.

EL-E-CT'ION-DÄY, n. The day on which an election is held. Oldham.

EL-E-CT'ION-EER', v. n. To use means for promoting an election to an office; to use arts in an election; to canvass. Qu. Rev.

EL-E-CT'ION-EER'ER, n. One who is active in promoting an election. Dean Isaac Milner.

EL-E-CT'ION-EER'ING, n. The course of measures and arts used in an election. Warton.

Electioneering is not only a political activity, and a social one—it is an art, and it is even a game. Thomas, Marquis of Wharton, who died in 1717, was calculated to have spent in electioneering the sum of £80,000. Qu. Rev.

EL-E-CT'ION-EER'ING, p. a. Using means to promote an election; furthering, or employed about, an election. Ld. Brougham.

EL-E-CT'IVE, a. [It. elettivo; Sp. electivo; Fr. électif.—See ELECT.]

1. Bestowed, or regulated, by choice;—opposed to hereditary; as, "An elective monarchy."

2. That elects; exerting the power of choice.

All moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grav.

Elective affinity, (Chem.) the apparent preference which chemical substances show to certain others when combining with them.—Elective franchise, (Politics.) the right of voting in the election of a public officer or magistrate. Qu. Rev.

EL-E-CT'IVE-LY, ad. By choice; by election. Ray.

EL-E-CT'OR, n. [L.] 1. One who elects; one who has the right of voting; a voter; one appointed to elect a President of the U. S.

2. A prince of the old German empire, who had a voice in the choice of the emperor.

On the dissolution of the German empire in 1806, the title of elector was merged in that of king, grand-duke, &c., by all the German states except Hesse Cassel, whose sovereign is still designated elector. Brande.

EL-E-CT'OR-RAL, a. [It. elettoriale; Sp. electoral; Fr. électoral.] Relating to an election or to an elector; electoral. Burke.

EL-E-CT'OR-RÄL'I-TY, n. The territory of an elector; electorate. Wotton.

EL-E-CT'OR-ATE, n. [It. elettorato; Sp. electorado; Fr. électorat.] The territory, jurisdiction, or the dignity of an elector, as in Germany.

EL-E-CT'OR-ESS, n. An electress. Burnet.

EL-E-CT'Ö-RI-ÄL, a. Relating to an elector or an election. "An electoral college." Burke.

EL-E-CT'OR-SHIP, n. The office of an elector. "The son is to succeed him in the electorship." Howell.

EL-E-CT'TRE (ē-lēk'tur), n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον; L. electrum.] Amber.—See ELECTRUM. Bacon.

EL-E-CT'TRĒP'E-TĒR, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and Gr. τρέπω, to turn, to change.] An instrument for changing the direction of electrical currents. Francis.

EL-E-CT'TRESS, n. [Fr. électrice.] The wife, or the widow, of an elector. Burke.

EL-E-CT'TRIC, } a. [L. electrum, amber.—It. elétrico; Sp. eléctrico; Fr. électrique.]

EL-E-CT'TRI-CÄL, } 1. Containing, or capable of exhibiting, electricity; as, "Amber is an electric substance."

2. Pertaining to electricity; as, "Electric fluid"; "Electric shock." Brande.

EL-E-CT'TRIC, n. A body or a substance capable of exhibiting electricity, and of preventing the passage of it from one body to another; a non-conductor of electricity. Smart.

EL-E-CT'TRI-CÄL-LY, ad. By electric influence; by means of electricity. Clarke.

EL-E-CT'TRI-CÄL-NĒSS, n. The quality of being electrical. Scott.

EL-E-CT'TRIC-CÖUR'RĒNT, n. A current or stream of electricity passing, by means of a conductor or conductors, from a body overcharged to another undercharged. Ogilvie.

EL-E-CT'TRIC-BĒL, n. (Ich.) A species of fish resembling the eel, and possessing the power of communicating electric shocks so violent that men and even horses are overpowered by them; the Gymnotus electricus. Van Der Hoeven.

EL-E-CT'TRI'CIÄN (ē-lēk'trīsh'ün), n. One who is versed in the science of electricity. Wilson.

EL-E-CT'TRI'CI-TY, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber; It. elettricità; Sp. electricidad; Fr. électricité.]

1. The invisible, subtle agent, termed the electric fluid, produced by the friction of certain substances, as amber, glass, sealing-wax, &c., and so-called from having been first observed in amber; a property in bodies, when excited by friction, of attracting or repelling other bodies.

2. The science which explains the laws of the electric fluid. Franklin.

EL-E-CT'TRIC-TĒL'E-GRÄPH, n. An apparatus employed for transmitting intelligence by means of electricity. Morse.

EL-E-CT'TRI-FI-Ä-BLE, a. That may be electrified; capable of being electrified. Smart.

EL-E-CT'TRI-FI-CÄ'TION, n. The act of electrifying; the state of being charged with electricity. Craig.

EL-E-CT'TRI-FIED, p. a. Charged with electricity; as, "A body lightly electrified."

EL-E-CT'TRI-FY, v. a. [i. ELECTRIFIED; pp. ELECTRIFYING, ELECTRIFIED.]

1. To communicate electricity to; to render electric; as, "To electrify a Leyden jar."

2. To affect by an electric shock; as, "To electrify a person for the cure of disease."

3. To rouse suddenly, as by a shock of electricity; to thrill; to charm; to enchant; as, "His speech electrified the audience."

EL-E-CT'TRI-FY, v. n. To become electric. Craig.

EL-E-CT'TRI-FY-ING, p. a. Thrilling; enchanting.

EL-E-CT'TRINE, a. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον.] Relating to electrum or amber. Maunder.

EL-E-CT'TRI-ZÄ'TION, n. [It. elettizzazione; Sp. electrizacion; Fr. électrisation.] The act of electrizing. Ogilvie.

EL-E-CT'TRIZE, v. a. [It. elettizzare; Sp. electrizar; Fr. électrifier.] [i. ELECTRIZED; pp. ELECTRIZING, ELECTRIZED.] To electrify. P. Cyc.

EL-E-CT'TRIZ-ER, n. That which electrizes; especially an electric apparatus used for medical purposes. Harrington.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-BI-ÖL'O-Q-ÜY, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), βίος, life, and λόγος, discourse.] The science of electrical forces as shown in mesmerism. Brande.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-CHĒM'I-CÄL, a. Pertaining to electro-chemistry. Clarke.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-CHĒM'IS-TRY, n. The science which treats of the agency of electricity or galvanism in effecting chemical changes. P. Cyc.

EL-E-CT'TRÖDE, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and ὁδός, a way.] The surface by which electricity passes into and out of other media;—used chiefly in speaking of the poles of a galvanic battery. Brande.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-DY-NÄM'IC, } a. Relating to EL-E-CT'TRÖ-DY-NÄM'I-CÄL, } electro-dynamics. Smart.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-DY-NÄM'ICS, n. pl. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and δύναμις, power.] The science which treats of the effects or phenomena of electricity in motion. P. Cyc.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-SILD'ING, n. A mode of gilding copper or silver by the agency of voltaic electricity. Ogilvie.

EL-E-CT'TRÖL'O-Q-ÜY, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and λόγος, a discourse.] That department of physical science which treats of electricity. Ogilvie.

EL-E-CT'TRÖL'Y-SIS, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and λύω, to dissolve.] (Chem.) The act of resolving compounds into their elements by electricity; the decomposition of bodies by the electric current. Faraday.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-LYTE, n. A substance susceptible of direct decomposition by the action of an electric current or the voltaic pile. Brande.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-LYT'IC, a. Relating to electrolysis, or electro-chemical decomposition. Faraday.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-LY-ZÄ-BLE, a. Susceptible of decomposition by the electric current. P. Cyc.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-LY-ZÄ'TION, n. The act or the process of electrolyzing. Francis.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-LYZE, v. a. [See ELECTROLYSIS.] To resolve compounds into their elements by the agency of electricity. Brande.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-MÄG'NĒT, n. A bar of iron made temporarily magnetic, by causing a current of electricity to pass through a wire coiled around it. Francis.

EL-E-CT'TRÖ-MÄG-NĒT'IC, a. Noting wh-tains to that form of magnetism which is produced, or affected, by electricity. "Electromagnetic apparatus." Francis.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΑΓΝΗΤΙΣΜ, n. The science which treats of electricity and galvanism as agents of communicating magnetic properties. P. Cye.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΕΤΑΛ-ΛΟΥΡ-ΟΥ, n. The art of making copies of any object in copper, silver, gold, &c., by the agency of voltaic electricity; the electro-chemical precipitation of the metals, from a state of solution, upon prepared surfaces, as applied to various purposes in the arts. Hoblyn.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟΜΕΤΡ, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the presence and for measuring the intensity of electricity. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΕΤΡΙΟ, } Pertaining to an Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΕΤΡΙΟ-ΓΑΛ, } electrometer. Ogilvie.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΟΤΙΟΝ, n. The motion conferred upon magnets by electricity. Smart.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΟΤΙΒ, a. Exciting, or producing, electro-motion. Francis.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΜΟΤΟΡ, n. An instrument or apparatus to move the electric fluid. Ure.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΝΕΓΑΤΙΒ, a. Being in such a state, with respect to electricity, as to be repelled by bodies negatively electrified, and attracted by those positively electrified. Ure.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΝΕΓΑΤΙΒΕΣ, n. pl. Those substances which, in electro-chemical decompositions, make their appearance at the anode or electro-positive pole. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟΦΩΡ, n.; pl. ELECTROPHORI [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and φέρω, to bear.] A machine for preserving electricity a long time, consisting of two plates, one of which is a resinous electric, and the other a metallic plate. Hamilton.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΠΛΑΤΕ, v. a. To plate with silver by electricity. Clarke.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΠΛΑΤΙΝ, n. A mode of plating inferior metals with silver by the agency of voltaic electricity. Ogilvie.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΠΟΛΑΡ, a. (Electricity.) Having electric poles, one positive and the other negative; — applied to conductors. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΠΟΣΙΤΙΒ, a. In such a state with respect to electricity as to be attracted by bodies negatively electrified. Smart.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΠΟΣΙΤΙΒΕΣ, n. pl. Bodies appearing in electro-chemical decompositions at the cathode electro-negative pole. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΣΚΟΠ, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and σκοπέω, to view; Fr. électroscope.] An instrument for exhibiting the attractive and repulsive agency of electricity, or for indicating its presence; an electrometer.

The gold leaf electrometer and other similar arrangements are electroscopes. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΣΤΑΤΙΣΜ, n. pl. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and στατικός, causing to stand; ἵστημι, to stand.] The science which treats of electricity in equilibrium, as distinguished from electro-dynamics. Ogilvie.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΤΕΛΕ-ΓΡΑΦΗ, a. Pertaining to the electric telegraph. Clarke.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΤΙΝΤ, n. A method of etching by galvanism. The subject being painted on copper with a thick varnish or paint, the plate is submitted to the electro-coppering process, by which a deposit is made upon it, forming another plate with the lines of the device marked in intaglio, or sunken. Ogilvie.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΤΥΠ, n. [Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber (for electricity), and τύπος, a model or type.]

1. A method of obtaining in metal perfect copies or fac-similes of medals, coins, copper-plates, printing-types, &c., by means of the power which voltaic electricity has of decomposing metallic salts in solution, and precipitating the metal upon a prepared surface. Francis.

2. An impression of a medal, coin, copper-plate, printing-types, &c., obtained by the electric precipitation of copper, or other metal, from its solution; voltatype. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΤΥΠ, v. a. To copy or make a fac-simile of by the electro-chemical process of depositing metals from their solution upon a mould. Hamilton.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΒΙΤΑΛ, a. Noting two electric currents, which are supposed by some physiologists to move in the nerves of animals, the one external and cutaneous, moving from the extremities to the cerebro-spinal axis; the other internal, and proceeding from that axis. Brande.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟΝ, n. [L., from Gr. ἤλεκτρον, amber.]

1. (Ant.) A term applied by the ancients to various substances, but especially to the substance now called amber, and to an alloy consisting of four parts of gold and one part of silver; an alloy of gold and silver. Brande.

2. Argenticiferous gold ore. Craig.

Ε-ΛΕΚΤΡΟ-ΑΡΥ, n. [L. electrarium; It. electuario; Sp. electuario; Fr. électuaire.] (Med.) A medicine compounded of some conserve, honey, sirup, &c.; a powder mixed with sirup.

The confusions of the present pharmacopœia are substituted for the former electuaries. Brande.

ΕΛ-ΕΜΟΣΥ-ΝΑ-ΡΥ (ἐλ-ε-μὸς/ε-να-ρε), a. [Gr. ἐλεησύνω; L. eleemosyna, alms. — See ALMS.]

1. Living on charity or alms. "The eleemosynary boys of that monastery." Warton.

2. Given in charity or for the support of the poor. "Eleemosynary lands." Stephens.

3. Founded by charitable donations for the purpose of dispensing some kind of gratuity; as, "An eleemosynary institution."

ΕΛ-ΕΜΟΣΥ-ΝΑ-ΡΥ, n. One who lives on alms. "Living as an eleemosynary." South.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝ-ΚΙΑ, n. [L. elegantia; It. eleganza; Sp. elegancia; Fr. élégance.]

1. The beauty of propriety; that which pleases by its propriety, grace, symmetry, or beauty; gracefulness. "Elegance of dress." "Purity and elegance of style." Addison.

2. Refinement; polish; politeness.

The natural progress of the works of men is from rudeness to convenience, from convenience to elegance, and from elegance to nicety. Johnson.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝ-ΚΥ, n. Elegance. Bp. Taylor.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝΤ, a. [L. elegans, from eligo, to choose; It. & Sp. elegante; Fr. élegant.]

1. Having elegance; pleasing by beauty, symmetry, or propriety; graceful; as, "An elegant house"; "Elegant furniture."

2. Refined; not coarse; graceful; polished; polite; genteel; as, "Elegant manners."

Polite with candor, elegant with ease. Pope.

Syn. — Elegance implies high cultivation by training and art; but grace is, in a great measure, a natural gift. A rustic girl, with little education, may have a graceful, comely, or becoming appearance and manners; but an elegant woman must be highly educated and accomplished. An elegant or accomplished lady; an elegant taste or style; refined, polite, or polished manners; genteel appearance; graceful attitude; comely figure; becoming dress. — See ACCOMPLISHED, GENTLE, POLITE.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝΤ-ΤΡΑ-Ξ (she-ε), n. pl. [L.] Things elegant, pretty, or ornamental. Ainsworth.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝΤ-ΛΥ, ad. In an elegant manner; in a manner to please by beauty, propriety, or grace; gracefully.

ΕΛ-ΕΓΑΝΤ-ΜΙΝΔ'ΕΔ, a. Having an elegant mind or a refined taste. H. More.

|| ΕΛ-Ε-ΓΙ'ΑΚ (120) [ἐλ-ε-γ'ι'ακ, S. W. J. E. F. Ja. Sm. R. O.; ἐ-λ'ε-γ'ι'ακ or ἐλ-ε-γ'ι'ακ, P. K.; ἐ-λ'ε-γ'ι'ακ, Wb.] a. [Gr. ἐλεγίαιος; L. elegiacus; It. & Sp. elegiaco; Fr. élegiaque.]

1. Used in, or relating to, elegies; as, "Elegiac verse." Holland.

2. Mournful; sorrowful; plaintive.

Let elegiac lay the love relate. Gay.

Elegiac verse, a pentameter verse used in elegies. English words ending in iac have the accent placed on the preceding syllable, elegiac being the only exception. (See PENN. 120.) Almost all the Greek theopists place the accent of this word on the penultimate syllable.

"Our own analogy would lead us to place the accent upon the second syllable of this word; but its derivation from the Latin elegiacus, and the Greek ἐλεγίαιος (in both which the antepenultimate is long), obliges us, under pain of appearing grossly illiterate, to place the accent on the same letter. But it may be observed that we have scarcely an instance in the whole language of adopting a Latin or Greek word, and curtailing it of a syllable, without removing the accent higher on the English word." Walker.

|| ΕΛ-Ε-ΓΙ'ΑΚ, n. Elegiac verse. Warton.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΓΙ'Α-ΚΑΛ, a. Belonging to an elegy, or to elegiac verse; elegiac. Colgrave.

Ε-ΛΕ-ΓΙ-ΑΜ'ΒΙΟ, a. [Gr. ἐλεγίον, the metre of the elegy, consisting of an hexameter and a pentameter, and ἱαμβος, an iambic verse.] (Pros.) Noting a sort of verse used by Horace. Crabb.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΓΙ'ΑΣΤ, n. A writer of elegies; elegist.

The great fault of these elegists. Goldsmith.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΓΙ-ΟΓ'ΡΑ-ΦΗΡ, n. A writer of elegies. Clarke.

ΕΛ'Ε-ΓΙΣΤ, n. A writer of elegies. Warton.

Ε-ΛΕ'ΓΙΤ, n. [L., he has chosen.] (Law.) A writ of execution given on judgments for debt or damages; — so called because the plaintiff had choice of this writ or of another called fiert facias. Burwill.

ΕΛ'Ε-ΓΥ, n. [Gr. ἐλεγεία; L. elegia; It. & Sp. elegia; Old Fr. élegie.] A poetical composition of mournful character; a mournful song; a funeral song; a dirge.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

ΕΛ'Ε-ΜΕΝΤ, n. [L. elementum; It. & Sp. elemento; Fr. élément.]

1. A first or constituent principle of any thing; that which admits not of division or decomposition into two or more ingredients of unlike properties; a simple or uncombined body; as, "The elements of water are oxygen and hydrogen."

Formerly, and still in popular language, earth, a r, water, and fire are called the four elements, because they were formerly deemed first principles. "The elements be kind to thee." Shak.

2. pl. First principles of any art or science; essential points; rudiments; as, "The elements of arithmetic."

3. pl. The letters of a language. Johnson.

4. pl. (Physics.) The data employed in a calculation, as of an eclipse, &c.

5. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing; suitable state. "A fish is out of his element when he is not in the water." Milton.

6. pl. (Theol.) The bread and wine used in the Lord's supper. Hook.

† ΕΛ'Ε-ΜΕΝΤ, v. a. To compound or constitute of elements. "Elemented bodies." Boyle.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑΛ, a. [Sp. elemental.]

1. Relating to the elements; — relating to, or produced by, one or more of the four elements, earth, air, water, and fire.

Transparent, elemental air. Milton.

Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war. Dryden.

2. Arising from first principles; natural.

"Elemental repugnancy." Browne.

3. Relating to the first principles or rudiments; rude; simple; elementary. "Elemental knowledge." Burke.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑΛ'Ι-ΤΥ, n. Combination of ingredients. [R.] Whitlock.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑΛ-ΛΥ, ad. In an elemental manner. Smart.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤ'Α-ΡΙ-ΝΕΣΣ, n. The quality of being elementary. Scott.

† ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑΡ'Ι-ΤΥ, n. The state of being elementary or uncombined. Browne.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑΡ'Ι-Α, a. [L. elementarius; It. elementario, elementare; Fr. élémentaire.]

1. Having only one principle or constituent part; uncombined; simple; as, "Oxygen is an elementary substance."

2. Relating to or explaining first principles or elements; rudimental; rudimentary; primary; initial; as, "An elementary treatise."

3. Of, or belonging to, one or more of the four elements, earth, air, water, and fire. "The elementary region." Spenser.

Elementary organs, (Bot.) the vesicles and tubes of which the cellular and vascular tissues are composed. Henslow.

ΕΛ-Ε-ΜΕΝΤΑ'ΤΙΟΝ, n. Instruction in the first principles. [R.] Coleridge.

ĒL'E-MI (ēl'e-me) [ēl'e-me, Wb. Crabb, Brande; ē-l'e-me, K. Johnson, Ash]. n. (Med.) A resinous exudation from the Amyris elemifera, a tree found in the West Indies and other tropical countries; — used in ointments. Brande.

ĒL'E-MINE, n. (Chem.) The crystalline and purified resin of elemi. Francis.

Ē-LĒNCH', or Ē-LĒNCH' [ē-lēngk', Sm. C. Wb.; ē-lēnch', P. K.; ē-lēnch' or ē-lēngk', Ja.], n.; pl. Ē-LĒNCHS' or Ē-LĒNCH'ES. [Gr. ἑλεγχος; L. elenchus.] (Logic.) A specious argument; a sophism.

All your elenchs in logic come within the compass of juggling. Selden.
It is the safest way to set down elenches as monitors. Dacon.

Ē-LĒNCH'CHI-CAL, a. Relating to an elench. Scott.

Ē-LĒNCH'CHI-CAL-LY, ad. By means of an elench or specious argument. Ogilvie.

Ē-LĒNCH'IZE, v. n. To argue captiously or sophistically; to dispute. B. Jonson.

 1. One of a sect of ancient physicians, who practised from experience only, and not from theory. Hakevill.
 2. One whose knowledge is founded exclusively on personal experience; a trier of crude experiments; a pretender; a quack; charlatan.
 Such an aversion for innovators as physicians are apt to have for empirics. Swift.
 "Dr. Johnson tells us, the first acquaintance [em'peric] is adopted by Dryden, and the last by Milton; and this he prefers. There is, indeed, a strong analogy for the last, as the word ends in ic; but this analogy is sometimes violated in favor of the substantives, as in lunatic, heretic, &c.; and that this is the case in the word in question, may be gathered from the majority of votes in its favor, for, though Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, and W. Johnston are for the latter, Dr. Kennick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Enrick, Bailey, and Barclay are for the former. This word classes, too, with those that almost always adopt the antepenultimate accent; but the adjective has more properly the accent on the second syllable." Walker.
Syn. — See QUACK.
EM-PIR'IC, a. 1. Relating to, or versed in, EM-PIR'IC-CÄL, experiments; following, or relying upon, experience. "Empiric alchemist." Milton. "The empiric school." Brande.

EN-CLÔIS'TER, v. a. [Fr. encloître.] To shut up, as in a cloister; to cloister. Mede.

EN-CLÔSE' (en-clôz'), v. a. [L. include, inclusus; Fr. enclore, enclos.] [i. ENCLOSED; pp. ENCLOSEING, ENCLOSED.]

1. To close on all sides; to environ; to encircle; to surround; to encompass; to shut in; as, "To enclose lands by a fence, or a city by walls."

2. To part off or shut in by a fence, as lands; to set off as private property; to hold by an exclusive claim; to appropriate. London Ency.

3. To cover; to wrap; to envelop; as, "To enclose any thing in a letter."

This word is written indiscriminately enclose and inclose. It is derived more directly from the French enclos, than from the Latin inclusus. There is, therefore, a good reason for writing enclose and enclosure. This is the orthography which is given in almost all the English dictionaries. Kersey, Martin, Barlow, and Richardson, however, give the preference to inclose.

Syn. — See CIRCUMSCRIBE, INCLOSE, SURROUND.

EN-CLÔS'ER, n. He who, or that which, encloses.

EN-CLÔS'URE (en-clô'shür), n. [Old Fr. enclosure.] — Written also inclosure.

Syn. — Encomium, eulogy, eulogium, and panegyric, all imply the idea of praise or high commendation. The term encomium is used with reference to things, sometimes also to persons. Eulogy and eulogium are used with reference to persons, their character and actions; and they are commonly applied to a set speech, oration, or address, delivered in a public assembly. Panegyric is a high commendation bestowed on any person whom the speaker is disposed to applaud; and it may be a well-merited eulogy, or mere flattery.

EN-CÔM'PASS (en-kûm'pas), v. a. [From com-pass.] [i. ENCOMPASSED; pp. ENCOMPASSING, ENCOMPASSED.] To enclose; to encircle; to surround; to environ; to circumscribe. Look how my ring encompasseth thy finger. Shak.

|| EN-CÔRE' (ang-kôr') (ang-kôr', S. W. J. E. Ja. Sm.; ang-kôr', F. R.), ad. [Fr.] Again; once more; — a word used at public performances, exhibitions, or shows, when the repetition of some part is called for. Pope.

This word is perfectly French, and, as usual, we have adopted it with the original pronunciation. In other words which we have received from the French, where the nasal vowel has occurred, we have substituted an awkward pronunciation in imitation of it, which has at once shown our fondness for foreign modes of speaking, and our incapacity of acquiring them. Thus, caisson has been turned into cassoon, ballon into balloon, dragon into dragon, and Chamont (a character in the Orphan) into Shamoon; but in the word before us this nasal sound is followed by c hard, which after n always involves hard g, and this is precisely an English sound. Walker.

|| EN-CÔRE' (ang-kôr'), v. a. [i. ENCORED; pp. ENCOURING, ENCORED.] To call for the repetition of some performance, as a song. Whitehead.

EN-CÔUN'TER, n. [L. contra, against; It. incontro; Sp. encuentro; Fr. rencontre.]

1. Act of meeting front to front; — particularly a sudden or accidental meeting. To shun the encounter of the vulgar crowd. Pope.

2. A contest; a conflict; a battle; an attack; a combat; an assault; an onset; a skirmish; — particularly a sudden fight between single combatants or a small number of men. Let's leave this keen encounter of our wits. Shak.

Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow, To join their dark encounter in mid air. Milton.

Syn. — See ATTACK.

EN-CÔUN'TER, v. a. [It. incontrare; Sp. encontrar; Fr. rencontrer.] [i. ENCOUNTERED; pp. ENCOUNTERING, ENCOUNTERED.]

1. To meet front to front; to meet by accident. I am most fortunate thus to encounter you. Shak.

2. To meet, as something unwelcome, without flinching; to face; to front. I will encounter darkness as a bride. Shak.

EN-VĒL'OP, n. [Fr. enveloppe, or envelope.] A wrapper; a covering for a letter, parcel, &c.; an envelope. Isk. Barclay. Knowles.

EN-VE-LÔPE' (ang-ve-lōp' or en-ve-lōp') [en-ve-lōp', S. W.; en-ve-lōp', P.; an-ve-lōp', F. R.; en-ve-lōp', Ja.; en-ve-lōp', K. W. B. Baily, Isk. Barclay, Dyche, Martin; en-ve-lōp', J.; en-ve-lōp', Sm.], n. [Fr.]
1. A wrapper; an outward covering or case. "No letter with an envelope." Swift.
2. (Fort.) A mound of earth raised to cover or inclose some weak part.
3. (Astron.) A stream of light encircling the head of a comet on the side next to the sun; — called also coma. Hind.

EN-VE-LÔPE' Most of the English lexicographers and orthoepists both spell and pronounce the verb envelop, and the noun envelope, in a different manner; the latter being regarded as a mere French word. There are, however, a few exceptions; and Walker, though he authorizes en-ve-lōp', remarks, "This word, signifying the outward case of a letter, is always pronounced in the French manner by those who can pronounce French, and by those who cannot, the initial e is changed into an a. Sometimes a mere Englishman attempts to give the nasal vowel the French sound, and exposes himself to laughter by pronouncing g after it, as if written ongvelope. This is as ridiculous, to a polite ear, as if he pronounced it — as it ought to be pronounced — like the verb envelop."

EN-VĒL'OPED, p. a. (Her.) Entwined around by snakes. Ogilvie.

EN-VĒL'OP-ING, p. a. 1. Infolding; inwrapping; enclosing.

1. To taint with venom or poison; to poison, as a draught or a weapon.
The treacherous instrument is in thy hand Unbated and envenomed. Shak.
2. To make odious or hateful.
O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Shak.
3. To make furious; to enrage; to exasperate.
That thus envenomed, she might kindle rage. Dryden.

† EN-VĒN'OM, n. Poison; venom. Piers Plouhman.

EN-VĒN'OMED (en-vēn'umd), p. a. 1. Tainted with venom or poison. "Envenomed robe." Milton.

1. To surround; to encompass; to enclose; to encircle; to circumscribe; to hem in; — to invest; to besiege; to beset.
I stand as one upon a rock Environed with a wilderness of sea. Shak.
Methought a legion of foul fiends Environed me. Shak.
2. To involve; to envelop; to infold.
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death Environ you. Shak.
Syn.—See CIRCUMSCRIBE, SURROUND.

EN-VI'RON-MĒNT, n. The state of being environed or surrounded. Holland.

EN-VI'RONŖ, or EN-VI'RŖNŖ [en-ve-rŖnz', S. J. E.; en-ve-rŖnz' or en-vi'rŖnz', IV.; en-vi'rŖnz', P. C. IV.; an-ve-rŖnz', F.; en-ve-rŖnz' or en-vi'rŖnz', Ja.; en-ve-rŖnz', Sm.; en-ve-rŖnz' or en-vi'rŖnz', K.], n. pl. [Fr. environs.] The places that surround or lie near a town or other place or spot; places near; neighborhood; vicinity.

When you go to Genoa, pray observe carefully all the environs of it. Chesterfield.

“This word is in general use, and ought to be pronounced like the English verb to environ; but the vanity of appearing polite keeps it still in the French pronunciation; and, as the nasal vowels in the first and last syllables are not followed by hard c or g, it is impossible for a mere Englishman to pronounce it fashionably. — See ENCORE.” Walker.

“The fashionable pronunciation of the word environs is now neither English nor French; though already in Shakespeare's time, at least as a verb, that word had acquired a completely English enunciation, and is often found among our best poets, where the new pronunciation, not recommended certainly by euphony, would destroy the verse.” Mitford, 1804.

EN-VŖL'VME, v. a. To include in, or form into, a volume. Month. Rev.

EN-VŖY, n. 1. [Fr. envoyé.] A public minister sent from one government or power to another on a special mission, and so differing from an ambassador; a public diplomatic minister of second rank, inferior in dignity to an ambassador, but generally invested with equal powers. P. Cyc.

2. A messenger. [R.] Blackmore.

3. [Fr. envoi.] † A kind of postscript, to enforce or recommend what had been previously written in prose or in rhyme. Warton.

Syn. — See AMBASSADOR.

EN-VŖY-SHĪP, n. The office of an envoy. Coventry.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence or gifts of fortune in another; to grudge.

You cannot envy your neighbor's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel, nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants. Swift.

“The ancient pronunciation of this word was with the accent on the last syllable, and the y sounded as in eye, as the Scotch pronounce it at this day.” Walker.

EN-VY, v. n. To feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity; to feel envy. [R.]

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked? Sp. Taylor. Charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself. 1 Cor. xiii. 4.

EN-VY, n. [L. & It. invidia; Sp. envidia; Fr. envie.]

1. Pain, vexation, or hatred felt at the sight of the excellence, happiness, or prosperity of others; grudge of the good of another.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar. Shak.

Envy, to which the ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learned or brave. Pope.

Emulation looks out for merit; she may exalt herself by a victory; envy spies out blemishes that she may lower another by a defeat. Colton.

Envy sets the stronger seal on desert. B. Jonson. Base envy withers at another's joy,
And hates that excellence it cannot reach. Thomson.

2. Malice; malignity; ill-will; spite.

For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy. Mark xv. 10.

3. The object of envy.

4. † Ill-repute; odium. “To discharge the king of the envy of that opinion.” Bacon.

Ē-P'I-THÉT, n. [Gr. ἐπιθετον, something added;

ἐπί, upon, and τίθημι, to place; L. epitheton; It. & Sp. epitetto; Fr. épithète.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality, good or bad. "Leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous to the author." Swift.

An epithet is an addition, but an addition may be an epithet from Gr. ἐπιθετός, as it is gentle or harsh, or an ornament of diction. In the phrase Alexander the Great, great is an epithet, inasmuch as it distinguishes Alexander from all other persons, and it is an epithet, as it expresses the quality of the noun, Alexander. According to some rhetorical writers, the term epithet is limited to a part only of adjectives; but according to others, it is applied to the whole of them. "All adjectives," says Crabb, "are epithets; but all epithets are not adjectives." Thus, in Virgil's Pater Æneas (Father Æneas), the Pater (Father) is an epithet, but not an adjective."

2. A term expressing an attribute or quality; a title; as, "Richard, the Lion-hearted."

Syn.—Epithet is a technical term of the rhetorician; adjective, of the grammarian. The same word is an adjective inasmuch as it is a part of speech, and it is styled an epithet inasmuch as it is gentle or harsh, or an ornament of diction. In the phrase Alexander the Great, great is an epithet, inasmuch as it distinguishes Alexander from all other persons, and it is an epithet, as it expresses the quality of the noun, Alexander. According to some rhetorical writers, the term epithet is limited to a part only of adjectives; but according to others, it is applied to the whole of them. "All adjectives," says Crabb, "are epithets; but all epithets are not adjectives." Thus, in Virgil's Pater Æneas (Father Æneas), the Pater (Father) is an epithet, but not an adjective."

Ē-P'I-THÉT, v. a. To entitle; to describe. "Never was a town better epitheted." [R.] Wotton.

Ē-P-I-THÉT'IC, a. Containing epithets; abounding in epithets. Lloyd.

1. That part of philology which treats of the origin and derivation of words, as related to their signification.

Etymology has been so unsuccessful in establishing clear and definite principles, or so unfortunate in their application, that many persons regard it as bearing the same relation to grammar as astrology does to astronomy, alchemy to chemistry, or perpetual motion to mechanics. Welford.

2. (Gram.) A treatise on the parts of speech; that part of grammar which exhibits the uses and inflections of the parts of speech.

"In its widest signification, etymology takes cognizance of the changes of the form of words. However, as the etymology which compares the forms of fathers and father is different from the etymology that compares father and pater, we have, of etymology, two sorts; one dealing with the changes of form that words undergo in one and the same language (futher, fathers), the other dealing with the changes that words undergo in passing from one language to another (pater, father)." Latham.

2. The thing given or received in return for some other thing.

The respect and love paid you by all was a wise exchange for the honors of the court. Dryden.

3. A place where merchants meet for the transaction of business; — sometimes contracted into 'Change.

4. (Com.) The method of adjusting accounts or paying debts, when the debtor and creditor are distant from each other, by means of an order or draft, called a bill of exchange, so as to avoid the transmission of either money or goods.

A, of Boston, for example, wishing to pay a debt to B, of London, pays an equivalent amount to C, of Boston, who has a debtor, D, in London; and A receives from C an order, addressed to D, requesting him to pay the amount to B. This is sent in a letter to B, who presents it to D for acceptance or payment. Thus the debtor in one place is substituted for the debtor in another, and two accounts may be adjusted at the same time by the simple transmission of a letter.

Par of exchange, the equivalency of a certain amount of the currency of one country in the currency of another, the currencies of both being of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. Thus, according to the mint regulations of England and France, £1 sterling is equal to 25 francs, 20 centimes, which is consequently said to be the par between London and Paris. Exchange is made to diverge from par, either by depreciation of the currency in either country below the mint standard, or by the difference in the amounts of indebtedness between one country and another, called the balance of trade, which affects the relative demand for bills of exchange as compared with their supply. — Arbitration of exchange, a calculation of the exchanges of different places to discover how they affect the pecuniary result of mercantile transactions. P. Cyc.

5. (Arith.) A method of finding the value of one commodity or denomination of money in the terms of another. Davies.

6. (Law.) In conveyancing, a mutual grant of equal interests in lands, the one in exchange or consideration for the other. The estates must be equal in quantity of interest, as fee simple for fee simple, a lease for twenty years for a lease of twenty years, but the quantity of value is immaterial. Burrill.

2. To wait for; to await.

By me encamped on yonder hill, expect their motion. Milton.

3. To require; to demand as reasonable.

England expects every man to do his duty. Lord Nelson.

EX- To expect has reference to what is future; as, a person expects, not what is past, but something that is yet to come. But in this country, this word is often improperly used in conversation, especially by the illiterate, in the sense of to suppose, believe, or think; as, "I expect you have already heard of this matter." To expect, according to Grose, Halliwell, and others, is used in the same manner in some parts of England. According to Brockett, to expect, used in the sense of "to suppose, or believe, is a common northern expression."

"Many people have an odd way of saying 'I expect,' when they only mean 'I think,' 'I conclude'; as, 'I expect those books were sent to Paris last year.'" P. Gwynne.

Syn.—See AWAIT, HOPE.

EX-TËM'PO-RË, a. Extemporary; extemporaneous. "A sort of extempore poetry." Dryden.

"A long extempore dissertation." Addison.

"Ex tempore," Johnson says, "is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly." — "This principle [of making a discrimination between adjectives and adverbs] leads me to prefer extemporary as an adjective to extempore, which is properly an adverb, and ought, for the sake of precision, to be restrained to that use. It is only of late that this term begins to be employed adjectively. Thus we say, with equal propriety, 'An extemporary prayer,' 'An extemporary sermon,' and, 'He preaches extempore.'"Dr. Campbell.

† EX-TËM'PO-RÏ-NESS, n. The state of being extemporary, or unpremeditated. Johnson.
